PREFACE

The years stretching from 1841 to 1867 mark in the Province of Canada, a period of transition between the separate identities of the old colonies of Upper and Lower Canada and the federal system of today. They also mark an era in which many old disputes were finally settled, often after years of controversy, and new problems, which were sometimes carried over into the future Dominion, made their appearances. In the form of government itself there was a growing maturity and sophistication in the process of administration and in the procedures of parliament; new departments were created as Canada assumed functions formerly the prerogative of the Imperial authorities. Also, the rapid process of social, technological and economic evolution brought new pressures to bear and new demands for governmental assistance or control.

All these changes were mirrored in the increasing flow of reports, petitions, and submissions which were brought before the Legislative Assembly of the Province of Canada, and usually published as Appendices to its Journals. In their total these Appendices provide one of the finest primary sources for investigation of the era, yet they present a curse as well as a boon to the historian, because of their diversity, and the frequency with which their form and order changed, coupled with the fact that up until now no modern index has existed for their contents. As Patricia Damphouse points out, Victorian indexes were voluminous, but their method of classification was so different from that used today that they all too frequently provide an impediment, rather than an aid, to finding out what exists.

The project of preparing a new index to the Appendices of the Journals of the Legislative Assembly was made possible by a special research grant provided by the University of Western Ontario in the summer of 1972. Miss Damphouse, who is happily a graduate of both the Honours History programme and the School of Library and Information Science at Western, thus combining the knowledge of the historian's needs with the librarian's ability to organize data, agreed to undertake the task. The results which follow should be of major assistance in unlocking the sources of the Union period, one of the most complex eras in our history.

INTRODUCTION

The Act of Union of 1841 joined the old provinces of Upper and Lower Canada and provided a single, appointed Legislative Council and an elected Legislative Assembly for the new Province of Canada, which covered the southern regions of the Ontario and Quebec of today. From 1841 to 1859, the reports or returns to the Legislative Assembly were published separately from those of the Legislative Council, appearing at the end of each session as an Appendix to the Journals of the Legislative Assembly. As a result of an increase in the cost of printing, however, these reports were published from 1860 to 1866 as the Sessional Papers of the Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly. Nevertheless, for the sake of simplicity in this Index, the reports will be referred to as the Appendices to the Journals of the Legislative Assembly.

A two-volume contemporary index to the Journals of this period was compiled by Alfred Todd (1819-74) Chief Clerk of the Private Bills Office. These volumes are entitled: General Index to the Journals of the Legislative Assembly of Canada, 1841-1851 (Montreal, 1855), and General Index to the Journals of the Legislative Assembly of Canada, 1852-1866 (Ottawa, 1867). To modern historians of the period they are more maddening than helpful, for the ideas on how to classify information at the period were far different than those of today. For instance, as stated in the preface to each of the indexes, "all documents laid before the House (except Reports of Committees) will be found under "Acts and Papers"; "Addresses" will be found under that head; and "Committees" are also arranged under that head."

This indexing method was contrary to modern practice, in which, to quote a leading authority:

"entry is specific (i.e., not under a more general subject heading) and direct (i.e., it reflects the form ordinary usage would suggest--that which the reader would first use when looking for the subject, rather than inverted forms, or a statement of general class and subdivision...)"¹.

Not surprisingly, the use of these broad headings, in addition to the alphabetical listing, or enumeration, of the reports contained in the Appendices, resulted in an indirect entry of subject material which makes many topics almost impossible to find. In addition, references made to specific reports contained in the Appendices were to the year of the Session in which they were presented, not to the specific report number or page.

¹Mills, J. A modern outline of library classification. London, Chapman & Hall, 1967. p. 175.

The purpose of this new index to the Appendices is simply to provide more efficient access to the material contained in the Appendices. The principle of direct entry is used wherever possible, by establishing the precise subject of a report. The emphasis is primarily on the location of specific subject materials and only secondarily on their relationships with other subjects. Thus, the subject of each report is considered to be of greater importance than the more general form heading, which is used in the old indexes. Entries are related by means of 'see also' references to indicate the relations of distributed materials. This policy has, of course, resulted in a greater number of subject terms. No form headings such as "Acts and Papers", "Addresses", and "Committees" are used. In this manner, an attempt has been made to provide more information and specificity in subject headings than can be achieved by the use of form headings.

A number of entries are found under headings for the Province of Canada, Lower Canada and Upper Canada. Such governmental bodies and activities which are considered to be basically governmental functions are entered as subheadings under these appropriate government headings. Reports on the subject of either Lower Canada or Upper Canada are entered under that section of the Province of Canada to which they refer. Wherever possible, however, bodies created by the government are entered under their own titles.

It has already been noted that departmental functions were evolving. Needless to say, official names for these departments also changed along with their status. In order to keep all entries for reports concerning a particular department together, the title of the particular branch of government which was eventually assumed during the period covered by the index is the one used.

In the actual indexing of a report, references are made to the year of publication and the number, or letter, of the report itself contained within. For the years 1863 and 1865, the volume number is also included, for two sessions of the Legislature were held and hence two separate sets of Appendices were published, for both of these years. The letters "N.P.", which follow some reports, indicates that that particular report was 'not printed'. After 1852, when printing costs increased, the Legislative Assembly left unprinted a number of the reports, laid before the House only in manuscript copies, many of which survive in the Public Archives of Canada.

For his encouragement and support throughout this project, I wish to thank Frederick H. Armstrong of the History Department, University of Western Ontario. I would also like to thank Professor Gloria M. Strathern, formerly of the School of Library and Information Science, University of Western Ontario and now of the University of Alberta Library School and Professor Diana Priestly, Law Librarian, University of Victoria, Victoria, B.C. Professor Priestly was kind enough to make available to us the results of a project she has been working on involving the bibliographic recording of the volumes in the legislative and parliamentary sessional series. The University of Western Ontario provided a research grant to aid in the publication of this work and Edward Phelps has been good enough to act as publisher.

In a set of the Journals, Appendixes and Sessional Papers for the years 1852-1866 there are 105 octavo-size books and 3 quarto-size books. The complete set from 1841 to 1866 therefore numbers 138 books, exclusive of the two published index volumes.

Lists of appendices, alphabetically and numerically arranged, are printed at the front of the first volume only, of the appendices during the years 1841 to 1859. An exception is in 1854-5 when the list is printed at the end of part 3 of the Journal. In and after 1860, the alphabetical and numerical list of the Sessional Papers is included in the front of each volume in the yearly set.

After 1860 there are still appendices to the journals, published in the journal volumes. These are reports and minutes of committees (standing, joint, select) reporting to the Assembly.
